brandon 10:44 AM
It was a pleasure to work with you as well... you taught me things I didn't know, didn't know... asked legit questions and followed thru to completion.

Senior Software Engineer

karen 11:55 AM
Whoa! What news, you are leaving Glympse. It is disappointing that you will no longer be on the team. What is next for you?

karen 11:59 AM
Oh, so it was not your decision. He mentioned the automation in his email out to the company.

natalia 11:59 AM yeah, came as a surprise :)

karen 12:00 PM
Yes, you will be missed. Let me know if you need anything if/when you begin searching for something new.

You have absolutely been an asset to the team and am sorry that it will no longer be the case. It's unfortunate that so soon after you started we went remote due to COVID. I very much appreciated the work you were doing and you did make life easier for many of us!!

Project Manager

nicoleta 6:24 PM

Warren 10:47 AM
Thanks for doing what you've done for QA here (i.e., building the whole damn thing which didn't even exist before).

Warren 8:27 AM
Absolutely will do. And thank you for the kind words 😊 I'm sure you'll find something great, and hopefully with a bit more... direction to ensure your success.

Director, Solutions Engineering

Max Klechikov 1:33 AM
I only now realize how long I was part of this team and that you were there for almost as long. I'll miss you a lot. You were the last gate keeper that didn't allow us to screw up. It was always pleasant to talk to you about different things, even not related to work. I wish you best of luck on your new journey. Stay safe and positive! And if I'll ever be in your area - dinner on me 😊

sarah 10:02 AM
oh of course, natalia! I'll absolutely do that for you.

I'm so sorry to hear that your time at Glympse is ending but know that you'll end up somewhere else that will be more equipped to actually listen and to respond to the issues you diligently find. 😊 Over the course of my career, I've been in your spot a few times and somehow things always ended up better and I am sure that will be the case for you, too.

Adam Meech 6:21 PM
Are you heading out?!

Adam Meech 6:24 PM
I'm sorry to hear that

natalia 6:24 PM
it's apparently the pivot towards all-automation, so no more manual testing for you guys, deal with it :D

Adam Meech 6:24 PM
Ha! Well certainly going to miss you

natalia 12:27 PM

Yauheni 12:29 PM
Wow, wasn't it your decision?

natalia 12:30 PM
nope, was told about it yesterday we're apparently switching to automation, and losing the manual testing...

Yauheni 12:31 PM

Yauheni 12:33 PM
Not sure it will work good. Don't worry, it was really cool to work with you.

FE Developer

Britt 10:40 PM
Hey Natalia.

Yeah I was pretty surprised by the email today, I did not see that coming. Not sure I see the logic in the sudden end either, as it's not ideal for you or the CS team. I wish this was not going down in this way. I will definitely write something for you in LinkedIn, just remind me if I get distracted, as it is late and I want to give it my full attention.

Between you and me, I think you did a great job coming in right before we all went remote, being the lone buffer between engineering and CS and trying to help us patch our very leaky ship. I'm sure doing all that without real guidance or a person to report to directly was super tough.

I enjoyed working with you, I really appreciate your willingness to keep the customer in mind when looking at how things work. If there is more I can do going forward to help you land on your feet, please let me know.

I'm glad I got to work with you as I did, and I enjoyed the time had to be friendly too. 🐼
